- (b) failed to satisfy the examiners in both the dissertation and in one or more modules at the first attempt in any one year of study; or
- (c) failed to satisfy the examiners upon the re-examination of a module or re-presentation of their dissertation may be recommended for discontinuation of studies under the provisions of General Regulation G12.

MAAL9 Examination results

At the conclusion of the examinations, and after presentation of the dissertations, a list of the successful candidates shall be published. Candidates who have shown exceptional merit may be awarded a mark of distinction, and this mark shall be recorded in the candidates' degree diploma.

SYLLABUSES FOR THE DEGREE OF MASTER OF ARTS IN APPLIED LINGUISTICS

This programme will take the form of modules. Candidates are required to complete a total of twenty modules: eight core modules; three elective modules; two applied research modules; and seven dissertation modules.

CORE MODULES (8 modules)

MAAL6001. Language systems and contexts

This course is concerned with the different levels at which systems operate in language and with the ways in which these systems serve communicative goals.

MAAL6002. Second language curricula

This course examines the cycle of curriculum design and renewal in English programmes in tertiary education and professional settings.

MAAL6003. Research methods and research design

This course introduces the fundamentals of research methods and design and provides for critical exploration of different research methods and conceptualizations in order to develop an informed understanding of their various strengths, limitations and potential contributions in applied linguistics research.

MAAL6004. Sociocultural and psychological dimensions of second language acquisition

This course introduces students to the sociological, psychological and anthropological aspects of second language development in the individual learner and within bilingual/multilingual contexts of use.

ELECTIVE MODULES (3 modules)

The following modules will be offered recurrently, with no prerequisites. Additional electives will be offered on a year-to-year basis, with the proviso that there will be at least one elective complementing or extending each core course.

MAAL6014. Language testing and evaluation

This module introduces fundamental principles of language testing and provides hands-on experience in the design, trialling, moderation, validation and evaluation of testing instruments.

MAAL6015. Computers in language teaching and research

This course aims to promote critical awareness of the major issues and technologies in computing for language teaching and research.

MAAL6017. Phonology

This course aims to enhance understanding of current issues in phonology and to consider the teaching of pronunciation and intonation in the Hong Kong context.

MAAL6018. Vocabulary teaching and learning

The course helps teachers focus on English vocabulary acquisition and how to present words effectively to learners. The kinds of words that learners need most, effective vocabulary learning strategies and use of corpora and online learning resources are also covered.

MAAL6019. Autonomous approaches to language learning and teaching

This course will explore the theory and practice of autonomy in language learning and teaching. Discussions will focus on differing interpretations of, and contexts for, learner autonomy, and how these interact with various methods of implementation.

MAAL6022. Literature and language teaching

This course examines the role of literature in language teaching. It begins by looking at the differences between two related concepts - “teaching literature” and “teaching language through literature”; and goes on to explore the following topics: justifications for using literature in language classrooms; methods of selecting literary materials for language teaching; ways of writing lesson plans based on literary sources to support the teaching of the four language skills; different kinds of literature curricula and programs in the world; stylistics and the teaching of literature; the teaching of language arts in Hong Kong.

MAAL6023. Advances in writing pedagogy

This course will bring participants up to date with developments in writing pedagogy. It reviews theoretical and practical developments that have influenced the teaching of writing in recent years and looks in particular at process, genre and critical approaches to writing and discourse studies.

MAAL6024. Independent study project

A project consisting of independent study and negotiated written work on an approved topic which builds on the student’s prior studies in applied linguistics.

MAAL6026. Current issues in second language acquisition

The course examines the development of syntax in a second language from a generative perspective, with particular attention to the acquisition of English as a second language by Chinese learners. Similarities and differences between English and Chinese and how these similarities and differences influence learners’ syntactic acquisition and development are discussed. By the end of the course, participants will gain a clear understanding of syntax from both qualitative and quantitative perspectives, as well as the methodology/techniques used in collecting second language data. Possible topics to be covered include word classes, noun phrases, language input, and corrective feedback.

MAAL6009. APPLIED RESEARCH PROJECT (2 modules)

In this course, students will be involved in formulating an investigative question, developing data collection instruments, collecting data, analysing the data and drawing conclusions.

MAAL8999. DISSERTATION (7 modules)

Candidates are required to complete a dissertation on an approved topic.
